The Hungarian Government has announced that former Premier Imre Nagy who came into power a day after the outset of the October Revolution in 1956 was tried secretly and executed for high treason. Along with Nagy, three other Freedom Fighter were executed; among them Kremlin warning to the Communist satellite strongly with those who deviate from the Moscow command. Already Yugoslavia has raised a cry of treachery and the Nagy execution is expected to produce profound shock in Poland and other Communist nations. Official Yugoslav sources called the purge of Nagy and the three others leaders a clear betrayal by the Russians. Nagy was taken forcibly from Yugoslav protection in the Yugoslavian Embassy in Budapest after the Red Army came in with tanks to crush the revolution in 1956. As one Yugoslav official put it this morning, "in a way we were responsible for his safety." Soviet experts in London fear the open use of force and secret trials will touch off other purges in the Communist Bloc in an effort to end the Tito-style revisionism. (?)

Meantime Western officials anticipate more Soviet Cold War manuevers may be forthcoming from the top-level strategy conferences apparently taking place in the Kremlin. Diplomats believe Premier Khrushchev called his Washington Ambassador to get first-hand reports before plotting his next move.
